COURSE DESCRIPTION

This course examines the diverse ways that religious traditions have intersected with the brokering of power in modern South Asia. We investigate the intersection of religion and power in different arenas, including historical memory, religious festivals, political upheavals, and violent actions. We cover both the British colonial period and post-independence India and, to a lesser degree, neighboring nations. We necessarily interrogate the history of the term “religion” as used in South Asia as an idea whose contours were formed during the colonial encounter with the West. At the core of our inquiry are how specific religious traditions have been invoked in political contexts (and vice-versa), public displays of religiosity, and the complex dynamics of religion and the state. We employ case studies involving numerous traditions, including Hinduism, Islam, Sikhism, Christianity, and Buddhism. Among other issues, we engage with questions of religious identity, networks of knowledge, and violence.

REQUIRED TEXTS

All readings are available on Blackboard.

GRADING AND ASSIGNMENTS

Your grade is based on three components:

Class Attendance and Preparation 35%
Blog Posts 35%
Papers 30%

Class Attendance: You are required to attend all classes. Your grade will suffer with any unexcused absence.

•  Excused Absences: Recognized grounds for absence include illness requiring medical attention, curricular or extracurricular activities approved by the faculty, and recognized religious holidays. You must contact the professor or absences will be counted as unexcused.
• Extended Absences: Any student who misses eight or more sessions through any combination of excused and unexcused absences will not earn credit in this class. Such students should withdraw to avoid getting an F.

Class Preparation: You should come to class having carefully read all listed readings for that day. In addition, students are responsible for presenting their blog posts in class (5 minute presentations).

Please note that there are three distinct types of readings: secondary sources (unmarked), primary sources, and modern flashpoints. You should approach each type of reading differently. The bulk of our readings are secondary sources, i.e., analytical works written by scholars. These works provide information about a set of historical or current events and also argue for a particular interpretation of those events on the basis of scholarly arguments. As we move closer to events in our own time, select news items and opinion pieces are also loosely included in this category. In contrast, primary sources are the raw materials of history, typically created by people who were directly involved in the historical events in question. Modern flashpoints are contemporary works that fall outside the discipline of history; you should read modern flashpoints as primary (rather than secondary) sources, meaning as raw materials for our subject of study, namely the construction of religion and power in modern India.

Blog Posts: Students are responsible for contributing to a private class blog weekly during weeks 2-13. Your grade for the blog posts is apportioned as follows:
- Four blog posts per student (5% each)
- Eight comments per student (remaining 15% of grade)
Students will be divided into three groups that will provide 3-5 paragraph blog posts (per individual) every three weeks. On weeks when a student does not write a blog post, she will comment on at least one post. All blog posts will focus on current events and will be more fully explained on the blog. Blog posts are due on Sundays by 12 pm (noon) on the class blog; comments are due by 12 pm (noon) on Monday. Everybody is expected to read all blog posts and comments for the week before class on Tuesday.

Papers: Each student is responsible for two 5-page papers, due right before spring break and at the end of class. All papers should use 12-point, Times New Roman font, and contain 1 inch margins. Papers must be submitted in a hard copy and electronically, via Blackboard.

Class Policies

Absences: If you miss class or arrive late, you are absent. For extenuating circumstances, get in touch with the instructor at least 48 hours before the missed class. Do not contact the instructor about the content of missed classes. It is your responsibility to find out from classmates about subjects discussed in your absence.

Electronics in Class: Laptops are permitted for note-taking only in class; phones should be silenced. No recordings are permitted. If at any point electronics prove distracting, all electronics will be banned.
Late Work: All late work incurs a penalty of one letter grade for every 24 hours late.

Academic Dishonesty: Plagiarism, cheating, and other academic dishonesty of any sort will not be tolerated. Please familiarize yourself with the Rutgers Code of Student Conduct and resources about academic dishonesty: http://academicintegrity.rutgers.edu/. All students are required to include the Rutgers honor pledge on all major course assignments submitted for grading: “On my honor, I have neither received nor given any unauthorized assistance on this examination (assignment).”
